

INDIE SCENE

TUNDE OLANIRAN

The Second Transgression

tundeolaniran.com

When Prince has nightmares, the background music—and you know there's background music—probably sounds something like Tunde Olaniran's dark and delirious 21st century R&B. On his second in a series of five EPs, the perpetually project-hopping singer-producer fits rap verses, soulful vocals and bizarre samples—those are Chinese schoolchildren on "Brown Boy"—over paranoid electro-funk synths and vintage hip-hop beats. On "Autonomous," he pairs sub-bass throb with distorted rock guitar, making the line, "If there's just one thing I can say / it's that I'm restless, feel like I'm in a cage," feel utterly redundant. "I'm every single thing you think of me," he sings elsewhere, inviting all definitions, adhering to none.

'When Prince has nightmares, the background music—and you know there's background music—probably sounds something like Tunde Olaniran's dark and delirious 21st century R&B.'

